If this was destined to be a franchise, it didn't work. 2. Nicholas has succeeded in being a saint and a bureaucrat (answer b). In fact, Nicholas was a bishop, which is a bureaucratic job in itself. Furthermore, the bishops in the late Roman empire were part of the civil service, with the management of judicial and supervisory responsibilities of their dioceses. The emperor tended to trust the clergy more of his relatives. 3. There would be no Christmas parties in Oliver Cromwell (answer b). Exhaled Christmas celebration: SBACKETH OF POPERY! Nevertheless, it's fun to imagine John Milton (the Flack of Cromwell) becomes drunk and poetically proposing to Mrs. Cromwell. 4. The answer is D: three children. Do not worry; Herod still had four children to save. He also performed a wife and a son-in-law. None of the daughters of him was so honored. To the credit of him, Herod has never performed any of the grandchildren of him. 5. Magi were priests of the zoroastient religion, the dominant faith of the Parchian empire (responding to).
