This rhyme of the kindergarten has different different interpretations. The most likely to connect it to our closest body closer, the moon. The towards talks about water, which in the oceans is moving up and down every day, obviously caused by lunar gravitation. The height of the tides is not always the same thing, the level rises to the day the moon is in waxing (went to the hill), and it is on its highest with the full moon and decreases again during the period of Cauturing (fallen and broke his crown). A book, written in the 13th century by the Icelandic historian and the Poet Snorri Sturluson about Norwegian mythology (Germanica) describes how a guy called Hljáfa%kiÁ ¢ (Jack) and a girl named Gíla ¢ (Jill), while they were taking the Water of a well nearby, they were taken from the earth on the moon. Linguists have determined that children's names could be derived á ¢
