In humans, the two parotes are present on both sides of the mouth and in front of both ears. They are the largest of the salivary glands. Each parapy is curled around the mandibular branch, and segregates serous saliva through the duct of the parapide in the mouth, to facilitate chewing and swallowing and to begin the digestion of starches. There are also two other types of salivary glansy; They are submandibular and sublingual glansy. [1] Sometimes, glamandulas parotes accessories are found near the main glansy parotes. [2] Etymology The word paroted means literally "next to the ear". Greek Î Á Â ± Î Î Î (stem Î Î Î ± Äžâ''-) Á: (Glania) behind the ear
