Known for the direction of the great talented films Nil Battey Sannata (2015), Bareilly Ki Barfi (2017) and Panga (2020), with regular people and “flawed” for the characters, the last direction of Ashwiny Iyer Tiwari, co-directed with the filmmaker-husband Nitesh Tiwari, Break Point is an intuitive docu-series (on Zee5) In Mapping Love (Rupa Publications, Rs 295), the professional-turned advertising filmmaker Iyer Tiwari explores the complexities of relationships through the story of a girl named Oorja. On his cover, he chose to put the image of a cannonball flower. Iyer Tiwari, 41, shares a “deep connection” with this unusual flower that began years ago during his visits to the maternal grandmother’s house in Sion of Mumbai. “My grandmother’s house has an old cannonball tree. What fascinates me is that flowers are so laminated. You take a part of it and you will discover something beautiful inside. So, something else inside. For me, it is like peeling the layers to reveal secrets and spreading relationships,” he says. Modified extracts: ALSO READ |Journey of ‘Delhi’s Dolly’ in the evolution of Mumbai’s cultural life Mapping Love poster How did the docu-series come on Paes-Bhupathi? The block in March 2020 was just beginning when I received a call from Vijay Subramaniam by Collective Artists Network asking if Nitesh and I would be interested in telling the story of Leander and Bhupathi. This is the fastest “yes” we said. The proposal came as a hope during the block when we could put our creative energy in the development of something stimulating. We started with thought: ‘Let’s do something that has not been done before and do it world class’. We were talking about two legends that made India proud. It was important to tell the story in their words, where the heroes are and are sharing for the world to listen to what went wrong. What was the immediate task for you? Unlike a documentary, where directors interview people and create a structure, we and our co-author Piyush Gupta decided to create a structure in advance. We had to ensure that the emotional chart was intact and focused on their humanity. We were telling the story not only from the point of view of two champions, but also talking to sportsmen and sports lovers on dos and not a great partnership. How did you open them in front of the camera? Mahesh opened first. Leander got a little bit more. First, they need to trust us, to know that they were about to tell a story from theirs story that is emotionally binding, and talkup and down in their lives, that we weren’t interrogating them. Once they knew we wouldn’t be judged, they spoke to us frankly, also read |the story of the first Indian cinema in posters considering that this is an emotionally charged story, what was the experience of talking to them and those around? when we got leanders and mahesh together on the same screen during a video call, they didn’t know we were asking questions together. it was during the first days of realization of the series. Leander was in tears, this was the first time after many years, despite the minutes of life away from the house of others, they were talking on the screen. It was healing. all respondents had to come down in memory. Many people were part of their journey. the father of mahesh (cg krishna bhupathi) and the father of leander (vece paes) have crossed similar emotions. a long time, we had to make decisions right now. maybe, when you look back 20 years later, you think that what you did was correct, or you could do differently, tell us to co-direct the series with your director-husband nitesh tiwari. Do you two share the director’s credit again? We have been working together for a long time, both in advertising and in co-writing a function. we have always focused on our strengths. While working at break point, we knew who was taking responsibility. when nitesh asked the questions, I was behind the monitor, listening and looking in other aspects, like art and lighting. It was all pretty organic. We never decide before. If we like something and find it intriguing, we will. We didn’t expect break point to happen, but it happened. Your characters are mostly regular people. What does it mean to create them? All my characters are imperfect somehow. I show my character as real as possible and give a lived experience. nil. it was education for everyone and say that no dream is small. Bareilly. This is some rules that society establishes. “We do something that has not been done before and we do it world class.” during the pandemic, you published a novel, made a short film and now this series. It is important to continue to evolve and innovate as storyteller with new stories and formats. The world is moving fast in terms of technology, you can see various types of movies from all over the world. We should be even. Then, I will work on my web series. also read | once on an hour in calcutta of aditya vikram sengupta for the first time at the international festival of venetian cinema where did you feel strongly about writing love mapping? Did the novel surprise you? People always tell me when I write a synopsis, it’s like writing a novel. I write synopses 20-30 pages with details. for the movies, I write sketches ofthat turn in pages. I want to know everything about the person — their eating habits, the music they love, the kind of friends they have. They have.He would have been a good anthropology student. When I started writing this story, I heard it couldn’t be a movie. I always dreamed of writing a novel, I didn’t know it would take shape so soon. The biggest problem for writers is to start, but we can barely finish. I’ve finished it diligently. No one, including family members, knew what I was doing. It was my trip. For the many roles you do, do you follow a routine? Developing a ritual is necessary for any creative research. A script must be written before a film is made. Writing a novel is harder because you are not writing a-liners. You know your beginning and your end and you’re trying to find your way. For me, the best time to write is between 4:00 and 7:00. I don’t usually go back to what I wrote, otherwise I keep correcting. I keep writing until I finish and then I see it as a second draft.
