Are school uniforms a good idea essay

> K-12 From the classic rugby strips that decorated Hogwarts, Sailor Moon's beloved uniform wore when he wasn't fighting evil from the moonlight, school uniforms had some really iconic moments in the history of film and TV. Here are the 10 school uniforms that have made us want to attend a fiction school. Most of us spent all our childhood waiting for a letter of acceptance from Hogwarts. But we are honest – it was not the spells or magical beasts that made us want to be part of the world of Harry Potter; were the uniforms of the cool school. Although Hogwarts' students wore clothes and hats pointed throughout the Harry Potter series of books, the film's closet department decided to change a bit from film to film. In the first couple of Harry Potter films, Harry and his fellow Gryffindors sports scarf and golden scarves with black dresses. They switch to sweaters, white buttons and rugby ties later, but the Gryffindor colors are always incorporated. (Image via books_forever1012) Although the school uniforms on Gossip Girl are probably the most iconic school uniforms in TV history (seriously, just look at it on Pinterest - people really want to dress like this in real life), the school uniform itself is difficult to describe. While each character has a unique touch on the traditional uniform, boys typically white sport button-downs, tie, and khakis, while girls typically rock a plaid skirt. The show is two mainSerena and Blair, they never wear the same thing twice and this includes the way they wear school uniforms. Blair is known for dressing the uniform in a classic way, with bands, coloured pantyhose, and Jimmy Choos - while Serena goes for effortlessly, I-just-rolled-out-of-bed-and-guard-this-scontto look, with knee boots, leather jackets and loose curls. (Image via gossipgirl_fashion) Can you imagine a world - or more important, a Comic Con - without the Sailor Moon uniform? The uniform of the school of Usagi is basically just a more suitable version to the school of its uniform Sailor Moon (aka the skirt is much longer), and is rather similar to what the uniforms of the school in Japan really seem. Her school uniform changes a bit as she enters high school, but it is the red, white and blue sailor dress that the world knows and loves. (Image via navigatoreusako) Why, what could ever be more iconic than the music video of Britney Spears "Baby One More Time"? It's practically impossible to go to a Halloween party, even 17 years after the release of the video, without seeing a girl in a bad schoolgirl costume with pink and soft pork tail. Okay, so the fashion of the early 2000s wasn't that big. The big blue plaid skirts were far from flattering, but if they are not the first thing pop in your head when you hear the name "Mia Thermopolis", you are lying (ok, in addition to those frizzy hair). (Image via myworldwouldbe_awonderland) Who hasn't spent the early 2000s wanting themRory Gilmore's life? This school uniform was very similar to that in The Princess Diaries - really, really blue and not very fashion-forward - but Rory shred those sweaters and navy blazers, all while working at Harvard and breaking the heart of Chad Michael Murray. Impressive. (Image via gilmorgirls_) Although the main characters of Cruel Intentions were sans clothes more than they were in their real school uniforms, the traditional student uniform was quite fine. In fact, Kathryn's school uniform was definitely the most realistic thing in the film. (Image via kathrynmerteuils) We are honest: The only memorable thing about Vampire Academy was the uniforms of the chic school. Blair Waldorf would also approve the petty navy peplum blazers and pantyhose. (Image via justyourtypicalbooknerd) Although they only wore school uniforms for 0.02 seconds at the beginning of the second film Narnia (not to mention their boarding schools are almost never mentioned throughout the series), Pevensie's children definitely rock the marina and the maroon - which, mind, is quite difficult to do. No one has ever done a school uniform better than boys in "School of Rock" (yes, cheesy pun expected). While all the children in this film go through great transformations, they are their uniforms that get the real makeover - from preppy to chic rocker. Some schools require an open-end essay and allow an optional essay on some topics, such as how to contribute to greater diversity in the coming class. When it comes to writing an open end essay: Do: Write what you want to tell admission officers if you met them. Focus on something you care about with passion. Make sure he gets alive like a person. Write something unusual or convincing in your life. Draw your professional and life experience. If you've been out of school for a while or you're a single parent, use that vision. Write something that will stand in the committee's mind. Relax the story you're telling about yourself to your passion for the honest and honest lawi Sii. Tell the truth, not what you think they want to hear. Not: Use the essay to explain bad or low LSAT scores. Use an addendum for explanations. Rehabilitate your rewards and activities. The committee will know that the information from the application forms and/or the curriculum. Talk about how you wanted to be a lawyer since you were a kid. The committee read that 1,000 times. Go to gimmick. That clever poem or joke will probably fall to the ground. Write everything that happened to you. Focus on one or two life modeling experiences. Go too much. The committee makes a lot of reading. Two to 2 1/2 pages double space are probably a lot. Your goalbe to help people who are making the decision to know and understand why you want to attend the law school. Melanie Nutt, the Wake Forest University School of Law, said that one of the most memorable essays she's read lately was by a young man who said her mother was her hero -- and her inspiration to be a lawyer -- because she left an abusive relationship and raised him as a single parent. Another was a young woman whose father is a mechanic. He wrote on "life lessons learned under the hood of a car." What most of this advice is reduced to this: The best place to find a successful law enforcement essay is within your life story. Once you write your story, it's time to ask for help. Show it to a professor, consultant or editor for a useful criticism. Do you need some help with your law questions?
