The sightings of a maximum of two drones in the skies near New Jersey's New Jersey Liberty International Airport on January 22nd Suggested Air Traffic Controller to put 43 flights in a holding model, while nine flights were diverted , the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) confirmed. But now the questions are raised if the objects, stained at an altitude of about 3,500 feet, were in fact drones. Speaking in a personal skill through his Twitter account, Brendan Schulman, vice-president of politics and legal affairs to Drone Giant Dji, hypothesized that sightings Å å,~ "one from a united pilot and another by a south pilot -Vest "May eventually have been wrong, suggesting Å å,~ Å" droneÅ å å,~ may have been something else, like a balloon or a bag. The air traffic control audio obtained from ABC NewsÅ å includes one of the pilots who describe what "is like a drone" while the plane made its final approach, adding, "made the drone of about 30 feet From our right wing. å,~ The competent authorities are continuing to investigate the accident, with the precise descriptions of the pilots of what they have seen central for the investigation. In a tweet, Schulman described the sightings reported as "absolutely credible "Considering the difficult conditions at that time. Two drones simultaneously. In the darkness. At 3500 feet of altitude. It is very cold out, below freezing; not the kind of time for flying drones. This is not only credible. Å å å,~ "Brendan Schulman (@DroneLaws) January 23, 2019 Å å å,~" This is Cases of Knuckleheads fly the drones where we should not be, but we have strong reservations on [the Newark report]. "Schulman said at Washington's mail, adding", was the case after case after the case of someone who saw a drone in the 'air that has revealed a bat or a ball or a plastic bag. - In fact, that was the thought behind a similar accident at Heathrow airport in 2017, with officials who spent that what was originally thought to have been a drone near a line airliner In reality they were a plastic bag. Furthermore, officials in Gatwick, one of the busiest airports ukÅ å s, were forced to defend his decision to close the airport for 36 hours last month in response to the incursions of apparent drones, with some suggesting the sightings were Stati exchanged. No one has been still accused in relation to the accident. Or if not newark's sighting was real or wrong, there are always going to be some Å å knuckleheads å giving a bad fame for the vast majority of drones' owners flying their cars responsibly. Just last month, for example, a man was captured by flying an aircraft in a field 500 meters from Heathrow London å S airport a few days after Gatwick's chaos. There was no suggestion the operator was trying to cause hardthrow inconvenience, but the court still believes the accident quite serious to slap it with a fine of 2,000 english pounds (around $ 2,600). To fight rascal drone flights in the restricted airspace, a growing number of companies are developing a range of systems designed to reduce machines in a controlled way. These incursions not only represent a danger to aircraft piloted in the air, but also cost millions of dollars airport operators in interruption of activities.
